The importance of History is universally allowed. But to attain to an extensive acquaintance with it by the ordinary course of reading requires a degree of labour, and a length of time, which few comparatively are able to bestow.

VENICE—March 29.

Early on the morning of the activing the French made an attack on the Austrian advanced posts at Santa Lucia and Bussolengo, before the expiration of the truce, but were repulsed with considerable loss at both places. Athousand French prisoners and 60 officers, with two pieces of cannon, have been sent to Verons. The Austrians had many officers and men killed and wounded.

General Kray repulsed the enemy at Legnago, killed 3000 made 2000 prispners, took 14 pieces of cannon, and pursued the remainder towards Mantua.

The Piedmonteee insurgents are become so formidable against their new Lords, as to threaten the capital. Continual reinforcements of Austrian cavalry and infantry pass every day, by forced marches; and his imperial Majesty never had, during the war, such a numerous and fine army as we see at present in Italy.

of the Imperial armies, and of the Empirator to the Swiss.

not to make war against the Swiss, who are actuated against whom you have yourselves fought with so much bravery, in defence of your liberty and independence, and whose superiority of forces alone has reduced you to the wretched situation of which you are so deeply sensible, and at

Among the attempts and means employed to retain you in a

It is my duty, therefore, solemnly to declare to the Swiss of all descriptions, that his Imperial Majesty, is conformity to those assurances which he has on every occasion given to the Helvetic League, of his amity and good neighbourhood, is firmly resolved to preserve towards her, in the most active manner, the ancient friendly relations; and also, that his Imperial Majesty has no other view than that of contributing, to the utmost of his power, that Switzerland may chjoy, without interruption, its independence, its integrity, its privileges, its rights, and its possessions, without diminution or alteration

Among the happy effects of such a conduct to Switzerland may be reckoned the suppression of those measures which hostilities and violence have occasioned, and the re-establishment of the relations of commerce and communication between Germany and Switzerland

HOUSE OF COMMONS-April 19. REPORT OF SECRET COMMITTEE.

CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER moved the order of the day for taking into confideration the report of the Secret Committee, and moved that the Speaker should leave the chair for the House going into the Committee of the whole House.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER role, and fpoke in fubstance as follows :- It is not my intention upon the present occasion to detain the Committee by enlarging upon the circumstances stated in the report. which is now the subject of consideration.

From the report we perceive that the utmost advan tage has resulted from that great measure of precaution the act empowering his Majesty to secure and detain persons suspected of conspiring against his person and Government—a measure which has been attended with the most beneficial effects at moments the most critical, in breaking up the defigns of the conspired, when they approached nearly to the period of their execution.

Following up the suggestions in the report, the first motion I shall have the honour to propose will be to continue that measure, at the same time adding to it a provision to render it more effectual, a provision founded as well upon its general propriety, as upon the parti-cular circumstances which the report has explained.— What I allude to is, to adopt a regulation empowering his Majesty to transfer persons arrested under this act to any place within the kingdom which may be deemed most eligible. I do not mean to enlarge upon the policy of fuch a provision. I shall only observe that it will be notorious to the Committee from the report under confideration, and from another report lately presented to the House, that one of the principal features of that conspiracy which has been prosecuted in this country, but more particularly in the fifter kingdom, where i actually led to fo much calamity and bloodshed, has been that the deligns of the conspirators have continued to be conducted under the direction of persons in cuftody on charges of being its author, or guilty upon their own confession.

It will hardly be denied, that circumstances are such as to require that all doubts should be removed respecting the power of his Majelty to transfer persons in this fituation to the most fafe and proper place of confinement, and likewise to enable Government to detain in custody here persons arrested in Ireland in the circumstances I have described. This provision arises out of the message received from his Majesty respecting the perfons brought from the fifter kingdom, to be detained in confinement in Great Britain. I feel likewise that it will not be sufficient to continue and enforce the laws already adopted for our fecurity, if we do not adopt fome precaution against the particular character of the mischief against which we are called upon to guard. I and secrecy, such as we have seen so much prevail. It bate. In spite of every discouragement and every obalude to that point so clearly established by the most shall apply to those where the same illegal bond pre-

Impressed with the observation in the report of the Committee, that in the great struggle we maintain against Jacobinism, it is necessary to watch the fymptoms of the malady, and to adapt the remedy to the appearance it affilmes, we must feel ourselves bound to accommodate our precautions to the evil which we have discovered. It will at the same time be recorded to the honour of the British Parliament, that while it did not neglect the falutary precautions which circumstances imperiously dictated, it did not pass be yond the bounds of that necessity; that equally firm and temperate, it has recollected what was to be yielded to fafety, and what was due to the Constitution, that it might with just discernment and moderation accommodate the precaution to the danger. Confidering the inveterate spirit and the invincible perseverance of the enemy, with whom we have to contend, I do not think any one measure could be warranted as sufficient to carry the Constitution safe through that mighty struggle we have to maintain, to that haven of fecurity and peace, which after a period of exertion and perfeverance, more or less protracted, we have a confident hope of attain ing. For this arduous contest, however, or a more be it longer, we must be prepared; we must be deter-For this arduous contest, however, be it shorter or mined firmly to abide by the cause we have embraced, vigorously to continue the efforts we have exerted, to follow up wisely and vigilantly the provisions which we have hitherto employed, unless we are contented to yield to the fuperior vigilance, energy, and persegerance of an implacable enemy the pre-eminent bleffings which we enjoy. It is the duty of Parliament then carefully to watch the fymptoms of the malady by which we are af-

SECRET SOCIETIES.

The point which to-day feems most urgently to chal lenge our attention, is that of the fecret Societies I have mentioned, all of which possess a common diffin guishing character. Wherever they have existed, they have been animated by the fame spirit, directed to the fame objects, and known by the fame effects. The have spread themselves in Britain, in Ireland, through out Europe. In the fifter kingdom, we have feen them not merely threatening the mischiefs with which the are fraught, but at one moment scattering their balefu confequences, and openly attempting the overthrow of all established Government. Even here, notwithstand ing the prevalent loyalty of the great mass of the peo ple, and the powerful obstacles with which they have had to contend, we have seen that invincible perseverance in a bad cause by which the spirit of Jacobioism is peculiarly characterised, while in other parts of Eu-rope, the existence of these secret societies has uniform been the forerunner, or the attendant of the progress of French principles and the ravage of French arms. These Societies, too, are in their nature totally repugnant to the genius of this Constitution, and strange to the habits of this nation. They are clearly of foreign growth; and while we are bound to discourage them, we can employ with the more fatisfaction the strong measures which are necessary to their suppression, be cause we must be sensible that we do not trench upon the principles or the fpirit of that liberty we inherit from our ancestors; that we do not impair those privileges which give fanction to the great right of petition to all recognized classes of men, and with none of which to all recognized claites of men, and with none of which those new descriptions of persons can at all be confounded. Among the societies of this nature are, the Corresponding Society, the United English, the United Scotch, the United Britons, and the United Irish. These societies are now so clearly proved to be such abuse of the privileges of this Constitution, so entirely inconfistent with all Government, that all must agree that they ought to be suppressed. In doing this there is one consideration which we ought to keep in view we must be aware, that from the very outset the leaders of these baneful societies distinctly anticipated in their defigns all those horrors and calamities which have fince been developed in their progress. Many indivi duals, however, there must have been who, not understanding the purpose for which they were to co-operate or not forefeeing the evils to which they would lead, were lightly and inconfiderately drawn in to become members of fuch focieties. Adopting this diffinction, then, it is intended that the measures for suppressing these bodies shall only be prospective, that they shall no aim at punishment, but prevention. We shall do out duty in setting a mark on the house where the pessilential contagion prevails, and then let those who ente perish. In the first instance it shall be the mild and orgiving policy of the measures proposed, to separate the milguided from the criminal. At the fame time I have no hefitation in faying, that after experiencing this fignal exercise of mercy and forbearance, those who shall continue members of those societies, contract the guilt of adhering to deliberate treason. As, however, the great object is to detect and punish those who may be guilty of this offence, in its nature so deep and atrocious, I flatter myself that a summary conviction, followed by fummary punishment, would answer the defired effect. My intention, therefore, is to propose, that if any person after a day to be fixed shall continue a member of such focieties, they shall upon summary conviction before a magistrate, be liable to a certain fine, to be summarily inflicted. Looking at the description of persons who in general compole these associations, I hope that this regulation will be attended with the most falutary effect. Persuaded that even this simple mode of proceedings, and this very gentle punishment will be effectual, I am happy to propole as a remedy for the evil a measure which fo little trenches upon those bulwarks of liberty which it must be our wish to preserve. At the same time, while in a political view it may attain the object defired, the punishment it provides in a moral view, is by no means commensurate to the guilt which it affects. That there are degrees of guilt among the members of these societies is obvious; it is necessary to keep this distinction before us.

To be merely one of the herd may not be fo criminal as to take an active part in promoting the illegal purposes for which the illegal affociation is formed. I thould propose therefore to give an option, either to proceed by fummary conviction and fine, or by way of indictment in any Court of Record, leaving it to the discretion of the Court to punish the offenders by fine or imprisonment, or in cases of greater aggravation by transportation. It will be necessary likewise to provide that the law shall not be confined in its operation to the focieties already known by the names enumerated, but to focieties of the fame kind, and directed to the fame objects, by whatever varying appellations they may be diffinguished. Of this kind are those where there exists an unlawful and wicked engagement of mutual fidelity and fectecy, fuch as we have feen fo much prevail. It luded people; where is practifed that mysterious secrecy in the appointment of the members and the committees the prefident, fecretaries, and the whole management of the affairs of the fociety. All these affociations, where fuch practices exift, shall be declared unlawful I need not helitate to propose to accompany this provifion with one which is necessary to its effect. to subject the masters of those houses where such meet ings affemble, whether public or private, to a fine.-Persons who have been members, and withdrawing themselves before a given day, to be exempted from the operation of the law. These regulations, in themselves so persectly free from the imputation of severity, will, I hope, be sufficient to secure the objects we have in view. Such will be the first branch of the second measure which I feel it my duty to propose. DEBATING SOCIETIES.

The next part of this bill would be intended to te medy an evil of inferior importance, one which in a certain degree must fall under the daily observation of every man who hears me, and which has formed a part of the plan fo inceffantly purfued, of perverting the understanding, depraying the minds, and corrupting the morals of the people of this country : I allude to the debating focieties, which, conducted, as they have been, and directed to the questions they discussed, tend to undermine all the principles of morality in the minds of those by whom they are frequented. Some time ago it will be recollected that perfons delivered lectures of the most feditious tendency, and when thefe were prohibited by the laws fo properly introduced for remedy of fuch abuses, they assumed the title of historical lectures, and, with little variation, were directed to the same objects as before. Discussions of this nature in the hands by which they were taken up, and to the audience to whom they were addressed, were employed to attack all religion, government, and fociety, though in the outfet they may not fo directly tend to the confequences which it was the object of these societies to attain, they ultimately tend to prepare the minds of men for those horrors and calamities which are the infallible confequences of those principles against which it is our duty to provide. To prevent fuch dangerous abuses, it will be a part of the proposed measure to extend the provisions against feditious lectures, and political discussions, to all places where money is taken at the door, making this the criterion, and putting them upon the footing of diforderly houses, unless where licence has been previously taken out, and where subject to the inspection of the magistrate. By this regulation conceive no innocent pursuit or amusement will be obstructed, and the public will be protected from an evil of a danger far beyond the importance of those from whom it proceeds.

The provisions which I shall have the honour to proofe will likewise be directed against another part of hat plan, purfued with no less industry to poison the minds of the ignorant and unwary. It has been the proud and diffinguishing principle of the law of England, that the liberty of the prefs has been cherished as the most invaluable bulwark of liberty. It certainly is one from which, when not abused, the greatest advantages might be derived, but when abused and perverted, it has led to the greatest mischief. It has, therefore, been the object of the law of this country, without imposing any previous restraint, to secure a sub-fequent responsibility in the author and publisher, if they ould be guilty of private libels or public treason. Those publications of a higher order, under the laws of the country, and the prevalent spirit of loyalty in the peoole, are tolerably fure of being subjected to punishment for their libels, at least these of a more flagrant nature. Happily those libels, formerly so prevalent, are, owing to these causes, more restrained. Unfortunately, how-ever, we have seen the liberty of the press abused in a way most calculated to pervert and mislead the lower orders. Instead of being employed to communicate knowledge and inftruction, it has been perverted to give falle and imperfect representations of facts, and inadequate or improper discussions of subjects nowise adapted those to whom they were addressed, and fitted to produce the greatest mischief to those who are the immediate objects, and ultimately to the public itself. Hence has been profecuted to fuch an extent the plan of diffeminating hand bills, tending to poifon the minds of the people, to deprave their morals, to pervert their loyalty, and to undermine their religion. Against this foculty, and to undermine their religion. Against this species of mischief some new provisions are necessary, the object of which will be, always to have responsible the author or publisher. This regulation is strictly in the spirit of the constitution. If in its application it is new, it is because the evil is likewise new, while the remedy is fo good and unexceptionable in its nature, must be approved by all who value public public morals and public tranquillity. A provision, the object of which is fo legitimate, cannot be felt as a restraint by those who are engaged in the regular trade connected with the prefs. What is required, is to have the name of a publisher affixed to every hand bill, as in especies of publication. To prevent their being issued from private presses, it will be necessary to obtain some knowledge of those who may have such implements in their possession. To obtain this, it is project of the measure which I shall propose. The report of the Committee will remain for further confideration, and it will be for the House to confider whether the nature of the dangers to which we are exposed demands any fresh precautions. The circumstances of the times required a vigilance always ready to accommodate our measures of security to the degree of malignity which danger may affume, and to vary their remedies with the changing character of the evil by which we are threatened. Happy shall we be if the wife, moderate, and falutary provisions already adopted or proposed shall prove adequate to the inveteracy of the difease, the virulence of which neither detection nor punishment, nor a sense of the bleshings we enjoy, nor of the horrible calamities with which the principles of Jacobinism have desolated Europe, has been able to a-

posed to have a register kept at those places where types are fabricated, (which are not very numerous) to discover who acquire them, to make those who pow have preffes register them, and make it necessary for every publication circulated to bear the name of the publisher affixed to it. This regulation, I am fure, will not injure the cause of science, literature and improvement, or even interfere with any innocent amusement, while it will fecure the public against the circulation of anonymous treason, sedition, or impiety, by which, in the quarters most exposed, the pillars of morality, religion

The Right Honourable Centleman who now bring the matter forward, has not dwelt long on the Report of the

he did not; for a Report less supported by evidence, I bein, assent to the mass of that Report until I am made acquains with the nature of the evidence on which it is founded.

I sky the present laws of the land are sufficient for the popose of removing all the evil of which the Right Hosonic Gentleman complains. There is no reason for appreach that the laws will not be well administered in the comp. That being my opinion, I must dissent from any plan the law for its object the making of new laws.

I should be glad to know, with the exception of Fraction of the county possess. I should be glad to know, with the exception of Fraction than the present government of this country posses. They have all the powers of seduction, and the termod phishment that can be devised. Let Gentlemen who do this (if there he any who do ubt it) consider what is the sent state of the influence of the Crown; and let then appare that with what the influence of the Crown was is to country in former times. Let Gentlemen consider that is now near two and twenty millions of money raised in year in one way or other; that there is a million for the Ca. List, and then let Gentlemen consider what patronse mancessarily attend the collection and distribution of sachi menses sums of money. Such is the power which the Crown has to induce men, to allure, to persuade them to be friend to the Crown. But this is only one side of that abject, for may ask—la there nothing in the terfor of panishmens when have been lately inflicted on political opinion now in this sortry, that there is hardly a line to be drawn between a sortier and, a rebel? That if a man is not the one, he is also try, that there is hardly a line to be drawn between a sortier and, a rebel? That if a man is not the one, he is also try, that there is hardly a line to be drawn between a sortier and, a rebel? That if a man is not the one, he is also try, that there is hardly a line to be drawn between a sortier and, a rebel? That if a man is not probable that I should have been inclined to oppose that suspensed. I had not the honour of a scal at th their aid, whether they have not afforded them enough! want to know whether they provide not only that to kny war, but to attempt to overawe the Parliament, is high mason? Here is the principle of security which the Right Honourable Gentleman has stated to night. But he is not cented; for he says that measures of law should be adopted gainst all conspiracy; that seems to me to be only saying here shall be no conspiracy. Why the law has said that long sphare and the security of the security have gained strength; I mean in the late regulations that were made with regard to newspapers; the proprietor is made lable for every thing that appears in his paper, and a great facility is given to the mode of carrying on any procedure against him. Let us remember also, that to endeavour to ecduce the arry or navy from their duty is now prohibited also under the pah of death. Now I say that coupling and blending all the things together, the influence of the Crown will appear to a greatly increased; its power is now much greater than it ever was in the best periods of our history. The laws already is being are adequate to every good purpose of Government, if the coupling is the say of the suspension of the Habeas Corpus act the year before the last, because I thought there was ground laid for supecting there were traitors in this country; but now I am called upon to vote for the continuation of the imprisonment at those whose innocence I am induced to think of favourably, for they have now been imprisoned for one year without being they have now been imprisoned for one year without being brought to trial. But there is a case in which a man was take to a prison, and confined in a solitary cell, and in which had no means of sheltering himself from the rain but by es

The other bill is of a description, the thought of! which The other bill is of a description, the thought of, which gives me infinite pain. That all societies which hold a compondence with the French, or had a confederacy or compiany for that purpose, should be put down, is an assertion to which no man living can assent more readily than I do. The rened which the Right Hon. Gentleman proposes goes to putting an end to all societies together; he proposes in the first instance, small pecuniary fine if any man entered the door that has the brand of Government upon it; but afterwards, he said, there was to be a discretionary power to Justices, as they should example the said of the s

Another operation of this system is to pull down every clab in this country, for the Right Honourable Gentleman says, it applies to places where money is taken for admission, and know of no clubs where money is not taken; this will put an end to all public reactions where money is not taken; know of no clubs where money is not taken; this will put an end to all public meetings whatever upon political subjects. I see the Right Honourable Gentleman dissents from this also—I shall be glad to find that I am mistaken. The Right Honourable Gentleman disavows the idea of an imprisatur for a book, but talks of another sort of hability. I have no partiality for an imprimetur, but according to the view I have of his plan, I am alternate him than this, for in that case I shall have security after publication, although I am subject to the will of a

The ATTORNEY GENERAL said, that the improvement suggested by an Honourable Member (Colonel Hope) had his islest approbation, and should, if proposed, meet with his not hearty support—for he thought the public safety should be protected against those who, by pecuniary assistance or advice encouraged those societies that aimed at endangering it, and who, though not members themselves, so studiously forwarded the objects of those who were. The Honourable Gendman (Mr Tiefney) admitted the existence of United Brittons, of United Scotchmen. He admitted the existence of the London Corresponding Society. Yet, while he does not dony the principles of these societies, or the nichlevous tendency of those principles, he proposes to countract them by a reform in the representation of Parliament, a meety, however, the nature and operation of which he has no vouchasfed to explain. It was, perfectly easy, however, takes, that this was not the remedy which these societies were looking for—the report on the table, the transactions of these societies since the year 1791, the language of similar societies in France, furnished proofs of the contrary, which that Henourable Gentleman could not invalidate. Their wish was table this was the reform the Hon. Gentleman held out to hen as the great refinedy, they would spurn and reject it.—The Attorney General went over all the arguments of Mr Tierney, which he combated in a very able manner. He deworther the remaining of crimes, than to suffer them to continue, and thereby hear the penaltics of law.

Mr Pitri made a few concluding remarks. He observed, that it was singular in Mr Tierney to refuse his assent to the danger, merely because the information given to the Committensen the situation of this country now and in the rebellions in 1745. A mail from Lilbon arrived on Saturday, brought to Falmouth in nine days by the Wallingham Packet. Letters received by this conveyence represent the panic scalined by the menaces of France, to have been dispated by the recent victories of the Austrians on the Rhine; they add that a confiderable degree of intation had been occasioned in Spain by some British resides (we conclude privateers) having landed on various parts of the coast, for the purpose of plundering the defenceles inhabitants. At the date of the letters, the Cuoline frigate, and the Tonnant, Aquillon, Canopus, Spatiate, and Congregate, prizes, were the only, British

It was on Saturday flated, with much confidence, that Government had received intelligence from Mr Grenville, that his Prussian Majesty had, in the most decided terms, expressed his determination not to take a part in the present contest with France; and in reply to the request to permit the march of the Russian troops through his territory, had intimated, that the neutrality he had promifed to observe did not admit his acquiescence in such a measure; and that should it be attempted by force, he would, with his utmost means, repel and punish the aggression.

In direct contradiction to this it is now faid the Court of Berlin has expressed an inclination to join in the war, if Russia and Great Britain will guarantee her territories against the events of so perilous a struggle; and we are affured the moment the ratifications of this treaty (which it is unnecessary to say was agreed to) are exchanged, Prussa will act openly. With this view, we are told, it was, and with the concurrence of Mr Grenville, that propositions of peace were lately fent from Berlin to ris. They were fuch propositions as the Directory could not accept, without descending from the high ground they had taken; but Prussia thinks it politic to offer peace, that she may make war with eclat. The moment she begins hostilities, France will attempt to bribe Austria ; but the Emperor must have had sufficient experience to guard him against fuch artifice.

A number of persons have been apprehended here and imprisoned, and as they are without a fingle ex-ception, all British subjects, their imprisonment forms a general topic of convertation. I learn that they frequently held nocturnal meetings for private purpofes of which Government obtained the fullest information and, it is added, that it was by the confent of Mr Walpole that they were arrested;—the major part of them are natives of Ireland, but none of any respectability. They alledge they are Free Masons, but it will be vere difficult talk to perfuade the Portugeze that their meetings were innocent.

From Alexandria we learn, that Commodore Hood with a fmall detachment, had landed and taken a fmall fort near that town, but unable to keep it, had spiked the cannon and retired. COPY OF A LETTER FROM CALICUT, DATED AUGUST 28. 1798. By a veffel which arrived at Tellicherry from Mocha few days ago, we learn that a French privateer, called L'Unic, mounting 20 guns (eight-pounders,) and 300 men on board, had been at that port under Danish colours, and, after recruiting her water and provisions, and after gaining every information as to the destination of the different veffels there, departed. On the 5th inflant, off the island of Sokatora, at the entrance of the Streights of Babelmandel, she fell in with three garbs of Mouffas, and two of the bibbee of Cananore, all of which the captured with a fingle thot. Three of them were fnows, which, after plundering, they let go; the other ships were sent off for the island. Yesterday we had the satisfaction to learn, that a Moussas ship had arrived at Tellicherry. It appears that a Lieutenant and four-teen men had been put into the ship to carry her to the Mauritius; but they had not the precaution to take out any of the Moplas, who amounted to about 70. After having parted from the privateer about fix days, these people rose on the captors, put eleven of them to death, and the rest jumped overboard and were drowned — From the papers found in the ship, it appears to be the intention of Captain Le Meure to cruize off the Streights fome time, in the hopes of getting a large ship of Chil-laby's, with a large sum of money on board. He men-tions his intention of visiting the Malabar and Coromandel coalts, before his return to the island. He has taken 17,000 venetians and 40,000 dollars on the five

CALCUTTA, OCTOBER 10. 1708. By a gentleman that has arrived within thefe few days from the Mauritius, via Tranquebar, we have the following information :

At the date of our correspondent's departure from the Isle of France, viz. the 13th of August, public affairs were in the utmost disorder; M. Malartic, the nominal Governor, poffessed no influence or authority, which was completely usurped and exercised by a body stiling themselves "The Assembly." In this Assembly were four parties of opposite views and interests, each struggling to obtain the ascendancy, and to counteract the deligns of their antagonists. In one point, and in one only were thefe fons of liberty and equality united, namely, in a resolute and determined resistance to every arrette of the Directory for the emancipation of their flaves.

The national troops had been fent from the island with Sercie's fquadron some considerable time before our correspondent's departure. They had no efficient means of defence, and fuch was the divided state of their councils, and the general distrust reciprocally prevailing, that were an English force to appear before the island, it would furrender at discretion. Such a change was earneftly defired by the bulk of the inhabitants who were heartily tired of the reign of anarchy and disorder.

Under the head LONDON GAZETTE, our Readers will find very important intelligence from the theatre

In Italy, as well as Suabia, the French are very much inferior in numbers to the Imperial army; and this disadvantage to them will be increased by the arrival of the Russians. The French will now prove an old truth, that extended empires are the most feeble .-To retain their extensive conquests would require num bers more than they can provide; and in the failure of their ambitious projects many of their best troops will be loft. The Imperial army, it is thought, will not waste its time in besieging Mantua. It press forward to the Duchy of Milan, and by drawing line to Genoa, cut off all the French troops in Rome and Naples. In these operations, it will be greatly as-shifted by the English fleet, the Turkish and Russian forces in the Adriatic, the infurrections in Piedmont, which we find have not been suppressed, and still more by the Archduke, if as fuccelsful in Switzerland as he has been in Suabia. The defence made at Naples, at Civitia Vecchia; the infurrections in the Roman territories, in Piedmont and in Switzerland; the violation of every principle of freedom or independence in the Cifalpine Republic; demonstrate sufficiently the dispofition of the people, whose country is to be the theatre of these operations.

MASSENA, who it feems by the last accounts, had also arrived at Strasburgh, leaving the command of the army of Helvetia to Lacourbe, before his departure published a farage address to the Swifs, in confequence of learning that symptoms of infarrection had appeared in several of the cantons, of which the following are a few of the more prominent passages:

"Helvetians, can you imagine that amidd the efforts of courage, and the facrifices which that brave army makes for your defence, that it will coolly fee its heroes falling under the attacks of cowardly assassing? Do you think that I myself will hefitate to take terrible ven-

will I shew myself capable of punishing you, if you become traitors, and violators of the faith of treaties.

"I therefore declare, that from this moment, I shall hold the feveral communes responsible for all the events which shall happen within their serritory to the annoyance of Frenchmen,

"I further declare, that columns of the French army will march with rapidity towards the cantons which thall they any disposition to insurrection, and that such cantons shall be ravaged with fire and sword."

The Archduke, who entered Schaffhaufen on the 30th, has croffed the Rhine at Balle. According tothe Paris jourgals, the Imperial troops have marched into the latter city. The above proclamation of Matiena will shew with what joy the Swifs will receive them. It is a full confession of the desperate state of the French cause in that country.

All kinds of grain have experienced a very fudden and great advance in price. (See the different market prices in the next column.) This is attributed to the backwardness of the present spring, and the labours of the field. There cannot, however, be any cause on account of fearcity, for we have reason to be thankful, that however adverse the season may seem to be, there is abundance of grain still in the barn-yards.

Butcher meat bears a very high price.-Veal is the only article of moderate purchase, especially on Saturday's, when the market is in general well stocked by the country butchers, but still that is not an article of

But from which gross rent the land tax, feu duty, minister's ftipend, if payable by the land owner, per centage on repairs, &c. and the actual expences of collecting the rents, as more particularly mentioned in the schedules annexed to the said last act, will fall to be deducted.
